New Japan leaders focus on economy

TOKYO—JAPAN'S VOTERS HAVE CAST out the ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) for only the second time in post-war history, handing a landslide victory to the opposition party that campaigned on a promise to reverse a generation-long economic decline and redefine Tokyo's relationship with Washington.

Many Japanese saw Sunday's victory of the Democratic Party of Japan as the final blow to the nation's postwar order, which has been slowly unraveling since the world's second-biggest economy col-

Moral force set for battle

Puno: Shun cheaters in 2010 polls

By Norman Bordadora

DECLARING THE BATTLE was not in the streets and they needed neither guns nor gold to conquer, a group of civic leaders yesterday launched a movement for moral renewal in the Philippines, with a call on Filipinos to spurn candidates in the 2010 elections who bribe, cheat or lie.

Chief Justice Reynato Puno, who led the national launch of the Moral Force Movement (MFM), stressed the campaign the group would wage had no room for fence-sitters.

More than 1,000 representatives from "partner organizations," students and members of the academe attended the launch at the Far Eastern University auditorium.

Puno said in his speech that it was no accident the movement for moral transformation or renewal, which he founded, was being launched while

Mikey: We can well afford to buy US real estate

SAYING THAT HIS FAMILY HAS THE means to buy real estate in the United States, Pampanga Rep. Juan Miguel "Mikey" Arroyo yesterday claimed that Vera Files got it wrong when it accused him of hiding a $1.32-million Southern property in California from his statement of assets, liabilities and net worth (SALN).

"If you examine closely my SALN, if you read it well, you can see we can well afford to buy properties," Mikey told Inquirer.net.

Vera Files, a group of investigative reporters, is standing by its story.

In a statement, Mikey, the eldest of President Macapagal-Arroyo's three children, said: "The San Francisco Bay house is registered under Beach Way Park LLC [Limited Liability Company] in which I am a shareholder and which I declared in my SALN."

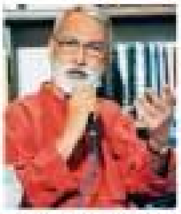

Mikey said this was even attested to by the writers of the story.

"Unfortunately, either the writer or writers deliberately imposed a malicious twist on the story or they lacked knowledge on the legal aspects regarding corporations," he said.

Mikey placed his net worth at P99.2 million in his SALN for 2008, slightly

India's Deep Joshi uses head and heart to fight poverty

DEEP Joshi, one of the six recipients of this year's Ramon Magsaysay Award, is honored for blazing a trail in professionalizing development work.

By Ma. Ceres P. Doyo

"IF ALL YOU HAVE ARE BLEEDing hearts, it wouldn't work. If you only have heads, then you are going to dictate solutions which do not touch the human chord."

Words to remember from India's Deep Joshi, one of the six recipients of this year's Ramon Magsaysay Award.

Development workers, civil society advocates, and social activists take heed. You need both head and heart in order to truly serve. You need both empathy and knowledge in order to be effective.

BLIT, LAKE SEBU, SOUTH COTABATO—When he was young, Lobo swung on vines and hung around a cave, the long-haired, loin-clothed poster child of a sensational Stone Age tribe supposedly lost in the time warp of a remote Philippine rainforest.

Now with the Western scholars, journalists and celebrities a distant memory, Lobo Bilangan wears faded track suits, chain smokes and eats canned sardines—just one among hundreds of poor farmers slashing and burning their way through the forest.

"We were denounced as a hoax," said Lobo, a thin man with a receding hairline who sows corn on the cleared land to feed his three wives and 10 children.

Palace twits Senate NBN inquiry: A replay

By Christian V. Esguerra and Christine O. Avendaño

WITH THE FIRST COUPLE cleared, Malacañang would rather put the NBN-ZTE scandal behind it and all but ridiculed today's resumption of the Senate inquiry into the scuttled $329-million deal with China.

Anthony Golez, deputy presidential spokesperson, likened it to a "replay" of a "telenovela"—the continuation of the investigation by the Senate blue ribbon committee headed by Sen. Richard Gordon.

"The President and the First Gentleman have nothing more to explain about," Golez said. "The questions have been exhaustively answered already."

Last week, the Office of the Ombudsman cleared President Macapagal-Arroyo and her husband Jose Miguel "Mike" Arroyo of involvement in allegations of bribery and overprice in connection with the National Broadband Network (NBN) project to wire electronically the nation's bureaucracy.

But it ordered the filing of graft charges against Romulo Neri, former director general of

GMA to seek Africa help vs pirates

By Cynthia D. Balana and Christian V. Esguerra

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO WILL SEEK the support of the 53-nation African Union (AU) to combat international piracy, particularly in Somali waters, which has affected many Filipino sailors, the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said yesterday.

An Open Letter to President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo

FILIPINOS DEMAND ADHERENCE TO PHILIPPINE CONSTITUTION

We write this letter to you in the fervent hope that President Corazon C. Aquino's commitment to democracy, and legacy of a peaceful and orderly transfer of power to her democratically elected successor, will be emulated by your entire administration. This would be in consonance with your past declarations that you will step down from the presidency when your term ends. Your latest was at the SONA last June where you said that elections would be held next year.

However, such crucial statements deserve clarity. What the people need to hear in unequivocal language, is that you, your political party and your administration will not pursue any course of action, other than the peaceful transfer of power of the presidency, by ensuring the integrity and successful conclusion of the electoral process every step of the way. This will lay to rest all suspicions or allegations, about your desire to cling to power beyond your term, either as President through an extension of term, as Prime Minister through changes in the Constitution, as Head under emergency rule through failure of elections, or by other means.

The events following President Cory's death left no doubt that the Filipino people deeply value her legacy. She fought for democracy and deposed a corrupt dictatorship with People Power, defended the Republic from those who sought to topple it; and peacefully transferred the reins of power to her successor, Fidel V. Ramos, who in turn did the same in June 1998 to Joseph E. Estrada, in fulfillment of their constitutional duty. For that, President Cory earned our nation's love and respect, and the admiration of the world's democratic nations.

Mrs. President, the Constitutional obligation to protect and sustain our democracy now lies before you. The people demand that you uphold your oath of office and reject any plan that will result in chaos, anger and divisiveness that will invariably lead to a dangerous confrontation between you and the people. We expect nothing less than that you do your part to strengthen and preserve our Democracy, by graciously and promptly relinquishing the Presidency to your successor on June 30, 2010.

MALACAÑANG LAST SATURDAY SAID THAT Romulo Neri, president of the Social Security System, would have to deal on his own with the charges he is facing in connection with the scrubbed $329-million National Broadband Network deal with China's ZTE Corp. In other words, Neri is now being discarded like a dirty, used rag after he has served his purpose of shielding President Macapagal-Arroyo and her husband from possible graft charges.

This development has prompted church, civil society and political leaders to urge Neri, who was director general of the National Economic and Development Authority at the time the NBN-ZTE deal was being negotiated, to come clean and reveal the whole truth about the transaction. Leading the call for Neri to tell everything that he knows about the deal was Caloocan Bishop Deogracias Iñiguez, who said: "It's up to him [to speak up] for the sake of truth and justice. I think the circumstances warrant that he say what really happened."

The implication when Neri sought refuge behind executive privilege when he was being grilled on the NBN-ZTE deal by the Senate blue ribbon committee was that he would be protected by the President. But now that protection has been removed, he is left to fend for himself. The Ombudsman has ordered the filing of graft charges against Neri and his suspension for six months without pay.

The troubles of Neri began when he testified in a Senate investigation that while playing golf with then Commission on Elections Chair Benjamin Abalos sometime in 2007, the latter offered him a P200-million bribe to award the NBN contract to ZTE. As Neda director general, Neri was the one who would recommend approval of the deal to the President.

Neri told the Senate blue ribbon committee that he reported Abalos' bribe attempt to the President, who told him not to accept it. But when the senators asked Neri what the President instructed him to do about the project, Neri invoked executive privilege. The committee then decided to ask him to talk in a closed-door executive session.

Several sources later said Neri was "on the verge" of telling senators the rest of his explosive story when an administration senator, Joker Arroyo, and a Cabinet member, Budget Secretary Rolando Andaya, intervened. (Both of them later denied that they intervened.) A source said Andaya's presence stopped Neri from saying anything further. Another source said Neri began to experience chills and fits. Aquilino Pimentel said it might have been partly due to fear—he was "deathly afraid" of what he was going to say.

Why was Neri "deathly afraid" then? Would his testimony have directly implicated the President and the First Gentleman in the scandalous NBN-ZTE deal?

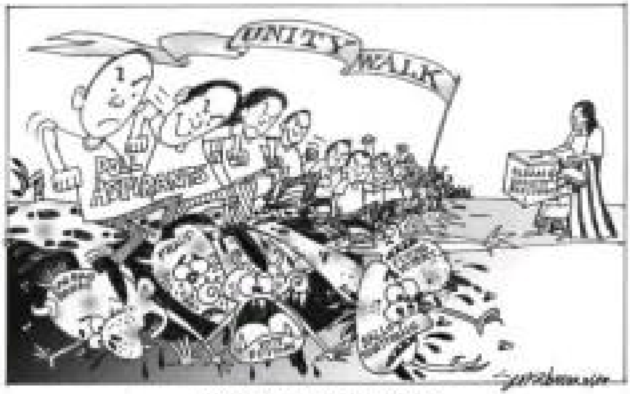

Probably to get him out of the "hot seat," Neri was designated chair of the Commission on Higher Education and much later, appointed president of the SSS. It was obvious that the President was protecting him and trying to keep him happy and contented. Malacañang expressed confidence that he would not reveal anything potentially damaging to the President.

But now that Neri has been left, in the words of Presidential Legal Adviser Raul Gonzalez, to "paddle his own canoe," the express or implied agreement between Ms Arroyo and Neri for him to protect her no longer holds. He finds now, probably to his regret, that one cannot hold Ms Arroyo to an express or implied promise of protection.

In the interest of truth and justice, Neri should now reveal the truth, the whole truth about the controversial NBN-ZTE deal. He need not fear losing his government post; he can always find a job in the private sector. If he is afraid that certain people would harm him physically, he can always seek the protection of church people and civil society. Whistle-blower Rodolfo "Jun" Lozada is now being protected by nuns. We are sure the nuns and civil society groups will protect Neri once he decides to come out with the whole truth about the NBN-ZTE deal.

It has almost become a cliché to say that the truth will set one free. We urge Neri: Tell the whole truth now. The truth will set you free and serve the cause of good government and the greater interest of the people.
